BUSY ALREADY IN THE PRECINCTS

Democrats Say Republican Work Forced Them to Begin Activities.

"You began it," is what the Democrats are saying to the Republicans in connection with the extraordinary political activity of the present in all the precincts of this Island. Though the election is far off, the party workers are hustling just as if they were on the eve of a primary. The Democrats say that the Republicans started the work, and that it was necessary for the followers of Bryan to work also in order to keep even.

The charge appears to have considerable truth in it, and the Republicans don't seem disposed to deny it. In fact, they are rather proud of it. When the Republican county committee recently began to study the political situation and decided upon Lorrin Andrews for chairman and party manager, the party's organization appeared to be in pretty bad shape. It was decided to reorganize at once, and all over the Island steps were taken to put new life into the precinct rolls. The result was unexpectedly large. Precinct Republican rolls began to grow so fast that the Republicans couldn't believe they were true and suspected Democratic stuffing. Then the Democrats got busy themselves, and now they are hustling to enroll the voters. The Republican workers say they have canvassed the vote already.

"The Republicans began it," said McAndrews yesterday, in speaking of the unusual political activity. "We had to show six to their half-dozen, and so when they started in precinct work we started in also."

McAndrews neglected to volunteer his views on the prohibition issue, and didn't enquire with any expression when the matter was mentioned.

Senator W. C. Achi has been doing some political talking in Hilo. So has Senator Makekani, according to the Hilo Tribune, which publishes an account of a gathering at which the two senators got considerable talking. Makekani being accused of an intention to support Link McAndrews. The account runs as follows:

There was an informal conference of the powers last week. Several well known politicians happened to foregather in Hilo, and last Thursday they met in the office of the county clerk.

Charlie Achi—generally referred to as "Wily Charlie Achi" in the Honolulu papers, in which he fills much space every campaign—presided. He represented the Republican party. Last election he had a party of his own, the Labor party, Laborites or Laborites, according to taste, but this year he has come back into the fold of the G. O. P., where he has been given much honor. It has been a habit of the uninformed to scoff at Achi's political influence, but he has without a doubt a following of some faithful hundreds who will follow him on any proposition. Lorrin Andrews knows that; that is why the fatted calf is being sacrificed for the return of the prodigal.

Senator Makekani, of Honolulu, who had just returned from Honolulu represented the Home Rule party, and David Ewaliko, said by some to be the Democratic party on this island, represented the intermarried ones. Then there were bystanders who did not count, except as a chorus.

"I don't know if Cupid will really run again," remarked Achi. "It is not generally known that he is really a sick man. Of course, in Honolulu, it is generally understood that he will run again, but I have seen some private correspondence which has created some doubt in my mind."

"How does Kulu stand in Honolulu?" asked one of the bystanders.

"He ought to do better there this campaign than he did last time," answered Achi. "Last time I instructed my men to vote for Notley, and that although the Home Rulers knifed me. And I pulled over nine hundred votes. Nearly all of these votes were taken from the Republican camp, and this time they will probably go to Cupid."

"Link McAndrews is working very hard," remarked Makekani.

"So he is," said Achi. "He is pulling over some votes from the Home Rulers. Notley will have no chance in Honolulu at all this time. He will get about five hundred votes on the whole of Oahu if he runs, maybe six hundred at the very outside. Link is getting at his votes."

"Kaniho is working for McAndrews this campaign," said Makekani.

"That is right," agreed Achi. "He told me he was going to work for Link."

"Yes," added Makekani. "He told me that he had written a letter to Notley, telling him to drop out of the fight for delegate. He said it was a waste of votes for him to run again."

"What is there in the talk that Kaniho is going to try to do up Holstein in Kaniho?" asked a bystander.

"Nothing in it," said Makekani and Achi in unison.

"I shouldn't be a bit surprised," said Achi dreamily, speaking apparently to a fly on the ceiling. "I shouldn't be a bit surprised to see Senator Makekani working for Link McAndrews this campaign."

"What's that," said Makekani, sitting up. "What d'ye say?"

"I said that you would be working for Link this time," repeated Achi with emphasis.

"I am not going to work for anyone for delegate," explained Makekani. "It's this way. There were three of us orators on Hawaii, Desha, Kaniho and myself. First of all I put Cupid in, when he ran against Wilson. That was when I beat Kaniho. Then I got in my candidates against Desha. That was when I beat Desha. This time I am going to let Kaniho and Desha scrap it out to see who is the best man of the two. The campaign after that I may tackle the winner."

"Let us have a straight answer," said Achi. "Are you going to work for Link?"

"It is this way," said Makekani, getting ready to explain all over again. "I'll bet you $10 that you work for Link this campaign," persisted Achi, fishing out the coin from his purse. "Ewaliko will hold the stakes. Will you bet?"

"It is this way," began Makekani again, but he did not take the bet.

"You ought to be elected to stay at home," said Achi scornfully.

"No, I'll be elected for the senate all right," answered Makekani. "The people know that I will work for their benefit," he added, virtuously.

"Yes," it is always the dampfools who get elected," retorted Achi. "The people don't want good men."

"They chewed on that for a while," the talk in Honolulu is all about the senators," said Achi. "They don't talk about the delegate, they don't talk about the prohibition question, but they do talk about the senators. And there is going to be trouble. The fourth district this time wants all three senators from Oahu. All the men who have been suggested or have come forward are from the fourth; there is not one from the fifth. Now it is an unwritten law in the Republican party that one time the fourth gets two senators and the fifth one, and the next year the fourth gets one and the fifth two. This year the fourth should have only one, and still they want all three senators. I tell you there is going to be trouble."

They drifted on to Hawaii affairs. "The Island of Hawaii should do one thing this year," said Achi. "It should get a bill passed providing for the election of the tax assessors and their deputies, or at least for their appointment by the board of supervisors. There is more sugar, more cattle, more sheep, more everything on this island, and still Oahu pays many times more taxes than does Hawaii. The assessments should be raised here, and, if the assessors were elected, they would raise the assessments to get revenue for the county. That is what I am advising the people from Hawaii."

Achi was informed that the present system was credited with being not only good, but exceptionally well administered.

"Well, I don't care. It's nothing to me," answered Achi. "I am not going to work for it for Oahu, for there we are all right, and it is up to the Hawaii legislators to look after their own island affairs. What do you think of it, senator?"

But Makekani didn't think. He let forth an eloquent burst of silence.

Then the twelve o'clock bell tolled and the county employees hurried off to lunch.

William T. Rawlins is another Honolulu politician who grazed Hilo with his presence last week, although he did not attend the above mentioned conference.

"I am not having much to do with politics at present," said Rawlins, when asked how political affairs were shaping themselves in the capital. "I have been approached, the proposition being that I should run for county attorney on the Republican ticket, but I have said nothing and am not giving out my position on the matter for the present."

Rawlins was asked whether Cathcart would seek the nomination again.

"You bet he will," answered Rawlins.

INJUNCTION CASE ON IN COURT

Robinson to Decide Attempt to Stop Paving of Fort Street.

E. J. Lord's injunction suit against the city and county to put a stop to the contemplated paving of Fort street with bitulithic pavement came on before Judge Robinson yesterday morning for hearing. Deputy County Attorney Fred Milverton appearing for the municipal government and Frank Thompson representing the plaintiff.

J. A. Gilman was called as a witness by Thompson, but nothing happened, as Milverton objected to the questions asked him by Thompson and was sustained by the court. Thompson wanted to examine Gilman as to the statements in his affidavit that he is the sole representative in Honolulu of the bitulithic paving company, but wasn't allowed to do so.

Milverton's contention is that Lord has not shown that he is an injured party, and that Lord has no special interest in the case. Milverton also claims that bitulithic, being a patented pavement, nothing could be gained by advertising for bids for laying it, as only one agent has any right to do so. He also contends that in cases where there is no competition, it is not necessary to advertise for bids.

The hearing was not finished yesterday and was continued until today.

BOOK OF MORMON IN JAPANESE LANGUAGE

Alma Taylor, Missionary, Completes Task after Learning to Speak It.

Alma O. Taylor and Fred Caine, young men of Salt Lake City, arrived yesterday on the Manchuria from Yokohama, and will remain here a couple of weeks the guests of Bishop Woolley of the Mormon church. The young men are returning home from an eight years' mission in Japan, one of the longest terms of service required of the missionaries of their church.

One of the reasons why Mr. Taylor has been in Japan so long is because he has been engaged in the translation of the Book of Mormon into the Japanese language. The task has taken eight years, although of course, the first two years of his residence in Japan were devoted to learning the language. In his work he has been assisted by Mr. Caine.

The young men were met at the wharf yesterday by Bishop Woolley and Mrs. Smith, wife of a young member of the church, and other Salt Lake people. Mr. Taylor is an old acquaintance of A. P. Taylor of The Advertiser.

TROUSERS

No living man of this age ever deliberately chose to "adopt trousers." He was forced into them and all other eccentricities of dress by women. In the very earliest sartorial experience of every man he is swathed in a queer bundle of incoherent bandages by a woman. Later she puts him into cute little dresses so that the neighbors can't tell him from his little sister. Still later she cuts off his curls and puts him into knickerbockers and he puts on "long pants" when she gives the word and not before. That is all that man has to do or ever had to do with wearing trousers. Woman forced him into them in the first place, and now he is afraid to wear anything else for fear of making a sensation.
